

Amanda Alexander, ASSOCIATE

214.292.3659
aalexander@lynnllp.com

Amanda Alexander is an Associate at LPHS whose practice spans the full spectrum of general business and complex commercial disputes in state and federal courts across Texas. She represents companies and individual stakeholders in high-stakes matters involving trade secrets, business torts, fiduciary and ownership disputes, non-compete and non-solicitation agreements, trademark infringement and unfair competition, insurance coverage, DTPA, and breach of contract claims. Clients value her command of the record and poised courtroom presence—qualities that have led to her growing reputation as a go-to advocate for complex disputes that require both precision and tenacity.

Amanda Alexander joined LPHS as an Associate in 2022. Prior to joining the firm, she worked as a litigation associate at Weil, Gotshal & Manges, where she gained experience preparing clients for deposition and trial, drafting motions, defending depositions, analyzing contracts and settlement agreements, and assisting in bankruptcy investigations. Notably, during her time with the firm, Amanda drafted opening and closing arguments on a pro bono team that successfully represented a woman seeking asylum in the United States.

In 2018, Amanda graduated magna cum laude from the University of North Texas, earning a B.A. in Journalism. She then went on to attend Texas A&M University School of Law where she graduated magna cum laude, in the top 3% of her class. While there, she combined her love for writing and the law by serving as the Executive Editor of the Texas A&M Law Review.

Amanda also served as an intern for many different judges in courts across Texas. During this time, she became adept at researching bankruptcy case law, assisting in drafting opinions, preparing pre-argument memoranda, reviewing trial records, and researching niche legal issues.

Amanda currently lives in Denton with her husband, Gino, a Dallas firefighter, and their daughter, Scarlett. They enjoy powerlifting, trying new restaurants, and spending entirely too much time at thrift stores.

EDUCATION

- University of North Texas, magna cum laude, B.A.
- Texas A&M University School of Law, magna cum laude, J.D.

ADMISSIONS

- State Bar of Texas
- Northern District of Texas
- Eastern District of Texas